I wrote these workout plans specifically for me considering my weaknesses that needed attention as well as available equipment. There are many, many types of programs written taking abilities, health, lifestyle and goals into consideration. This is not a substitution for an in person consultation with a qualified person. Please see a physician before starting any workout program.

The Plan #1: June 2014 - August 2014

The month immediately after my last show, throughout the summer, I did a push pull, 2x per week plan. I really enjoyed this workout and saw great gains in this time frame. I incorporated isometric lifting and focused on the eccentric (the downward) portion of the lift. I would switch out exercises to keep things exciting and incorporate drop sets. A drop set is the very last set you do immediately after the prescribed number of sets for an exercise, no rest. Drop the amount of weight (20-30%ish) and do as many reps as you can-feel the burn!

Drop set example:

Do 5 sets of barbell rows at 95 pounds in the 8-12 rep range. Immediately after set 5, do not rest but quickly and safely, take off 30lb from the barbell and do one more set with 65 pounds for as many as you can do.

Rep ranges also matter as they will produce different results.

Rep Ranges:

In general, the number of reps per set will achieve different results:

- 1-5 reps = Strength
- 6-12 = Hypertrophy (size)
- 12+ = Endurance

•

How much rest between sets?

• Lifting for Strength: 1-5 min rest

• Lifting for size and endurance: 30-90 seconds rest

These are, of course, general guidelines.

The Push / Pull Plan:

Push/ Day 1: Heavy Chest, Shoulders, Triceps, 6-10 rep range.

Pull/ Day 2: Heavy Back and Biceps, 6-10 rep range.

Lower Body Day 3: Heavy Legs and Abs, 6-10 rep range

Push/ Day 4: Higher Rep Chest, Shoulders, Triceps, 6-10 rep range.

Pull/Day 5: Higher Rep Back and Biceps, 6-10 rep range.

Lower Body Day 6: Higher Rep Legs and Abs, 6-10 rep range

Day 7: Off

The following workout is how it appears in my spread sheet as I like to keep track of progress.

DB= Dumbbell

BB= Barbell

/x = the x denotes the number of reps for the drop set after the forward slash.

The Plan #2: September - December 2014

After 8 weeks of doing "The Plan #1", I took a de-load week and then started the following program. This was a rough set of months due to being in physical therapy for a minor shoulder impingement. The majority of the time, Day #4 was a grab bag. I would work on whatever I could do. Since my shoulders need to increase in size, I would do whatever I could without pain. If I couldn't, I would do lower body stuff, focus on the glutes and do plyometrics.

3-5 exercises for 3-4 sets in the 8-12 rep range

Day 1: Shoulders (heavy)

Day 2: Legs and abs (quads/hams/calves)

Day 3: Triceps + Biceps

Day 4: 3 sets, 12-15 reps Shoulders (High Rep) Or lower body

Day 5: Back and yoga

Day 6: Chest and abs

Day 7: off

The muscle groups are worked in the above order to allow for ample recovery time. There are three weeks worth of exercises below. I go through and do weeks 1-3, then at week at 4 I will start over on week 1's exercises and try to improve by either resting less, increasing weight or increasing reps. Small changes are big changes! If I can do reps that are out of the allotted range, I increase weight.

Shoulder exercises I had to avoid for 2 months because they caused pain: upright rows, front raises, barbell shoulder press/ military press. Instead I would do DB shoulder presses because that was somehow fine and for a front raises, I would take a 10# plate and hold it out in front as an isometric exercise.

I also super set muscle groups as well. Keeps the heart rate up and the workout moving along. For example, I like to super set back and biceps or chest and triceps. Depending on your program, another good pair are biceps and triceps.

Super set: do two exercises back to back no rest. Rest. Repeat.

10 Bicep curls then 10 triceps extensions. Rest. Repeat 3 times.

X set/drop = do X amount of sets and then a drop set

DB= Dumbbell

BB= Barbell

Shoulders

High rep day shoulder circuit 4 x 20 Giant Set
